Colour Usage

Primary Colours (60%):

Deep Knowing and White carry the brand's primary visual weight. All packaging, all primary communications.

Supporting Colours (30%):

Root State and black provide the organic and grounding layer. Secondary text, ingredient callouts, educational content.

Accent (8%):

Emerge and First Light used as highlight moments only: A single underline, an icon, a data point callout. Never as background fills on large areas.

Reserved (2%):

Unlock and Signal used exclusively for maximum-impact moments. For Example, a single word on a campaign poster, a data visualisation bar, a notification badge. If used more than this, they will define the brand before anything else does and will alter intended brand personality.

Cocoa
Solids

2.3%

The chocolate component

At 2.3%, there is no meaningful concentration of flavanols, theobromine, or antioxidants. The cocoa here contributes colour and a faint chocolate flavour. Nothing more.

Artificial
Flavours

2.3%

Vanilla + Chocolate

"Nature identical" and synthetic flavouring agents. Why both? Real vanilla extract costs 30-50x more than synthetic vanillin at scale. The flavour cost here is a fraction of a rupee per pack. The premium positioning is not reflected in the ingredients.

Layouts and Grid

Fibonacci Sequence and Golden Ratio

A brand that speaks about organic growth should be built on the mathematics of organic growth.

Every layout across the SuperState brand system is divided according to the Fibonacci sequence: 1, 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 13, 21.

The same ratio that governs the spiral of a nautilus shell, and the unfurling of a new leaf governs the column widths, margin relationships, and content zones of every SuperState collateral. The relationship between any two zones always resolves to a ratio that approximates 1.618 : the golden ratio, naturally and without force.
